SUBJECT: Reactions to a Further US Buildup in South Victnem

- 1. In this memorandum we consider foreign reactions to an essuated US buildup to 150,000 troops in Vietnam as compared with the 50,000 now present and the 70,000 level due to be reached in August. We assume that no comprehensive public announcement of force goals would be made, and that foreign opinion would be reacting to a gradual perception of the US course of action.
- 2. Our main conclusions are that this strengthening of the US correitment would make some impression on the Communists, and would raise some dangers in our relations with the South Victnamese, but that the important reactions would come later, when the effectiveness of the total US effort was tested in combat. These considerations are discussed in the following paragraphs.

Reactions in South Vietnam

3. The initial reactions of the South Vietnemese would be somewhat embivelent: encouragement over the reinforcement, recomposed by some tendency to relax and let the US do the fighting. Each would depend upon the way in which US troops were caployed. If used to clear and hold large areas, particularly heavily populated areas, the US forces would tend to acquire toth the responsibility for the war and the stigms of an army of occupation with colonialist ambitions. This tendency would be less if the US forces were used in a mobile fashion to assist.

ARVN units, and shared in the most difficult fighting.

4. Ultimately, of course, the key determinent would be the effectiveness of the total US effort, political, economic, and diplomatic, as well as military. If this produced a sleckening of VC pressures, US-South Victuaness working relations would be fairly emooth. If, on the contrary, the war dragged on without respite, war weariness and anti-Americanism would probably begin to threaten the US political base in South Victuan.

Commist Resetions

5. Viet Cong and ERV. We believe that a US buildup itself, on the scale considered here, would not alter VC/DRV determination to prosecute the struggle. The Communists would recognize that, in military terms, their task had become hander. They would recognize that, in political terms, the US action reaffirmed its determination not to accept military defect. Fut the arrival of US forces in these numbers would not change the Communists! basic calculation that their staying power is inherently superfor to that of Saigon and Washington.

6. The real test, then, would be that of combat. The Viet Cong would respond, as it has to past injections of US forces, by stepping up the insurgency, and the DRV would reinforce it as necessary with men and equipment, including further line units of the FAVN. In this effort, the Communists would probably hold to their present strategy of attrition and subversion, although on a significantly increased scale. They would still seek to defeat the GVM through exhaustion and internal collapse without letting US/GVM forces engage them in decisive battle.

7. We do not know how the test of combet would come out of the level of US involvement now being considered. If, at this, or some higher level, the tide of lattle runs against the Viet Cong for a substantial period, the Communists would probably consider a large-scale ground offensive by DRV troops. They would recognize, however, that the enlarged US forces had made this more difficult. They would also fear that the US, with a very heavy stake in the ver, would not accept defect in that new kind of wer without expanding it to the DW and China. In these circumstances, they would probably prefer to recort to regotiations or simply to let the fighting subside while conserving their own forces. They would be particularly likely to react in this way if they had become convinced that in any enlarged war, the US would use nuclear weapons.

- 8. China. Peiping would react to the essumed US buildup by urging the VC and the DRV to continue the struggle. It would precise to come to Ecnoi's sid if the US involvement reached the point of an invasion of North Vietnem. It might also make some troop revenents in South China to underscore this commitment. We believe that as the fighting continued, China would be even less ready than the DRV to conclude that larger US ground forces could turn the tide.
- 9. The USSR. As the US commitment grow, the Soviet Union would find its problems growing more coute. Moscow would recognize that its cun military assistance, and its general shift to a hard, enti-US line, had failed to turn the US from its course. We believe that the Soviets would see no alternative to continued support for the DRV. In time, however, the risks of a prolonged that the US can evoid eventual defeat in Vietnam. In this sector, an increasing injection of US forces would be seen as a prolongation of the ageny and an increase in the risks of future escalation. Governments which now support the US course, such as the Fritish, Italians, and Japanese, would come under renewed demostic criticism. Covernments which oppose the US, such as France and India, would step up their pressures for negotiations. In general, however, these would reactions would not have as example in the scope of the air war. The ultimate effect upon the US position would continue to be determined by the eventual success or feilure of US policy in the Vietnamese war.

conditionts probably would not cause serious representations in South Korea, though some matterings would be heard. In the event of major FCK troop losses, it is likely that public sentiment in South Korea (-- stimulated by Prengyang radio and describe oppositionists -- would begin to question the judgment of President Pak, thereby contributing to the endemic political instability in South Korea. North Korea, through propaganda and troop movements and, possibly, contrived incidents in the Korean INZ area would attempt to heighten any insecurity among South Koreans that developed as a result of troop shifts to Southeast Asia.
